

Your INL Update — Week of Jan. 3, 2011

This is Misty Benjamin with your INL Update.

Idaho National Laboratory Deputy Lab Director David Hill will be in Boise this week speaking with state legislators. He will support the annual request from Legislative Economic Outlook and Revenue Assessment Committee for INL economic data to assist the committee in establishing the revenue projections for state budgeting efforts. The lab is expected to provide one of the few bright spots in the state's economic outlook for 2011.

A new study will explore if green buildings can influence and motivate employees. INL and the Canadian National Research Council are taking a closer look at office environments. Specifically, how green buildings – which already save energy – may also support employee satisfaction and work performance. You can learn more about the four-year study in the features section of inl.gov.

This was your INL Update. You'll find more information at inl.gov, including community announcements and the latest INL news.